RICHARD JACKSON (USA) - MARTIN KERSELS (USA) - MASSIMO FURLAN (CH) - SAVERIO LUCARIELLO (FR)

BORIS ACHOUR (FR) - PILAR ALBARRACÎN (ESP) - MATTHEW ANTEZZO (USA) - GILLES BARBIER (FR) - ALAIN BUBLEX (FR) - JULIEN BERTHIER (FR)

GALERIE GEORGES-PHILIPPE & NATHALIE 36 RUE DE SEINE 75006 PARIS
TEL: +33(0)1 46 34 61 07 •FAX:+33(0)1 43 25 18 80
WWW.GALERIE-VALLOIS.COM • GGPNV@WANADOO.FR

JULIEN BISMUTH (FR) - MIKE BOUCHET (USA) - VINCENT LAMOUROUX (FR) - PAUL McCARTHY (USA) - JEFF MILLS (USA) JOACHIM MOGARRA (FR) - KEITH TYSON (GB) - JACQUES VILLEGLÉ (FR) - JULIA WACHTEL (USA) - OLAV WESTPHALEN (D) - VIRGINIE YASSEF (FR)

ALAIN BUBLEX Monts fuji & autres ponts

EXHIBITION FROM 16 OCTOBER TO 20 NOVEMBER 2009 OPENING NIGHT THURSDAY 15 OCTOBER

"Things first need to apart from each other in order for them then to be together with each other."* This truism worthy of Lao Tseu or one of his gainsayers in fact speaks very accurately of connections and their conditions of existence. With Alain Bublex, the joining of distinct elements is done without illusionism, but with clear recognition of what distinguishes them. What happens when the artist integrates the emblematic Mount Fuji into "ordinary" photographic landscapes? It works well for them both! The strange link achieved here results from a double redefinition of the landscape. Mount Fuji is designated as an icon, as an archetype, for its vague evocative power. Even when crudely sketched, its presence transforms any patch of land by carrying it into the realm of dream, by pushing back its horizon. But Mount Fuji is also decontextualised and itself redefined by each new site that Alain Bublex "plugs" it into.

This new exhibition Alain Bublex is all about a general redefinition of the real, and of Bublex's earlier works as portions of this real. In other words, it's the same and it's different. Or, to put it another way, it will feature displays taken from his other exhibitions at Galerie Vallois. It is, then, an exhibition of exhibitions. Some pieces have been recreated, but with omissions and additions, and others are represented by big vectorial drawings based on photographs. The exhibition du jour is redefined by the ones that preceded it, and vice versa. More importantly, some of the works have become photos and some of the photos have been replaced by drawings evoking them, which are present in their proper place.

Monts Fuji & autres Ponts (Mounts Fuji and Other Bridges) emphasises equivalence. In an ordinary landscape, it's much of a muchness whether you add a remarkable mountain or a bridge: both perform the same role. A photograph from the Buy Steel series or its substitute in the form of a vectorial drawing, it's all the same thing. One represents the other. They are equivalent while not identical. Both share visual power, both promote steel. Another thing they have in common is humour. Or again, the grating effect of a non-consensual posture: buy steel because industrial landscapes need to be conserved, too! And so it hardly matters if the work drifts, it is already promotional "by its very nature." An Aérofiat will now be evoked only by name in a photograph serving as an advertising image. Self-referentiality is not at all conceptual here, but aims to put ongoing projects back on the workbench and increase the variety of ways in which the work is instantiated.

Alain Bublex multiplies substitutes and covers, joyfully ignoring issues of their authority as original works. The work and display, themselves substitutes for works and displays, are rendered fragile by their uncertain status. For, to repeat, with Bublex what really counts is much more the ongoing dynamics (processes) than the search for culmination or rest. And then, in order for things to be together with each other in the work, things and works first need to have been apart from each other.

Cédric Schönwald

* Georg Simmel, « Pont et porte » in La Tragédie de la culture et autres essais, 1909, tr. fr. Paris, Rivages, 1988.

HABITER 2050 - Creation by ALAIN BUBLEX CENTRE POMPIDOU 24 October 2009 - 8 March 2010

This Fall, Alain Bublex will occupy the new Children's Gallery on the Mezzanine with a «mysterious landscape» dedicated to futurology, imagination, creation and everyday life in 2050.

GALERIE GEORGES-PHILIPPE & NATHALIE

RICHARD JACKSON (USA) - MARTIN KERSELS (USA) - MASSIMO FURLAN (CH) - SAVERIO LUCARIELLO (FR) BORIS ACHOUR (FR) - PILAR ALBARRACÎN (ESP) - MATTHEW ANTEZZO (USA) - GILLES BARBIER (FR) - ALAIN BUBLEX (FR) - JULIEN BERTHIER (FR) JULIEN BISMUTH (FR) - MIKE BOUCHET (USA) - VINCENT LAMOUROUX (FR) - PAUL McCARTHY (USA) - JEFF MILLS (USA)

36 RUE DE SEINE 75006 PARIS
TEL: +33(0)1 46 34 61 07 •FAX:+33(0)1 43 25 18 80
WWW.GALERIE-VALLOIS.COM • GGPNV@WANADOO.FR

JOACHIM MOGARRA (FR) - KEITH TYSON (GB) - JACQUES VILLEGLÉ (FR) - JULIA WACHTEL (USA) - OLAV WESTPHALEN (D) - VIRGINIE YASSEF (FR)

SARA RAMO

PARTIE DE L'HISTOIRE (PART OF THE STORY)

EXHIBITION FROM 16 OCTOBER TO 20 NOVEMBER 2009

OPENING NIGHT 15 OCTOBER

At first, the house is empty. It looks as if the furniture, the objects and the people that occupied it all left a long time ago. It is the house's emptiness which evokes past time.

For a moment we might imagine an absence of future: time evoked by its own absence. Then, the coal-black earth covering the floor reinstates the presence of time, simply by its way of filling the space. It seems to be moving, to penetrate and spread.

Still, the temporality brought into existence by this earth is of another kind, a different type of temporality that permeates both the decoration of the walls and the stains that constellate them, but a temporality that remains confined to the space delimited by these same walls. The time of the earth bursts into the emptiness of the house, and we do not know if the earth will eventually bury the house or if, on the contrary, the house will manage to overcome the

On the walls of the gallery, the collages are - maybe, anyway - clues. Dry, dead branches, serve as supports for white cotton flowers, pollen that the wind scatters and that gets entangled in the branches.

Materials, limits, emptiness and movement are constantly evoked in the work of Sara Ramo, in her work on the different ways of inhabiting space and the different temporalities induced or expressed by different ways of life.

Thus, in Hansel and Gretel's House, an installation made by the artist for the 53rd Venice Biennale, the languid temps of a deserted field appearing on a monitor in an empty room, the wild and measureless time of balls bouncing along walls, and the time of those stones spat out by an old stove, afforded excess to other ways of living and understanding space, to telling stories and entering the world of tales.

In the same way, De passage invites us to travel through space-times that, although deemed dead, have their own movement.